! Every person supported by Evergreen Community Care — child, youth, or adult — has an individualized Daily Program Schedule that reflects their Individual Service Plan, their preferences, their school or day-program commitments, and meaningful community participation. A schedule is a living planning tool, not a fixed routine imposed on the person; it is developed with the person (and their guardian/team, for children and youth) and adjusted as their needs and preferences change. No person's day is left unplanned or unstructured by default, and no schedule may substitute for the individualized planning required under the Individual Service Plan process.

PART 1 — Policy Foundation

1. Policy Statement and Governing Philosophy

Every person in an Evergreen Community Care (ECC) program has the right to a day that is purposeful, individualized, and their own. This policy establishes the requirement for, and the standard content of, a Daily Program Schedule for every person supported in every ECC home — a structured but flexible plan that balances routine and predictability with genuine choice, community participation, and meaningful activity.

This policy implements MCFD SHSS Standard D.4, which requires a program of daily activities for children and youth in staffed residential care, and CLBC Service Standards 2025, Section 3, which requires individualized daily support planning and community participation for adults. The schedule is never a generic house routine applied uniformly to everyone in the home; it reflects each person's Individual Service Plan (ECC-PC-MAN-2026-001), their age and developmental stage, their culture and preferences, and — for children and youth — their school schedule and family/community connection time.

A schedule exists to serve the person, not the convenience of the program. Where a documented schedule and a person's in-the-moment preference conflict on a given day, staff use judgment consistent with Part 5 — the schedule guides the day, it does not override the person.

2. Legislative and Regulatory Framework

This policy is governed by, and must be read alongside, the following:

- MCFD Standards for Staffed Children's Residential Services (SHSS), Standard D.4 — structure, routine, and program of daily activities for children and youth;
- CLBC Service Standards 2025, Section 3 — individualized daily support planning, meaningful activity, and community participation for adults;
- Child, Family and Community Service Act (CFCSA) — best interests of the child, including education and cultural connection;
- School Act (M) — school attendance requirements for school-aged children and youth in care;
- CLBC service contract — day-program and community-inclusion expectations for adults.

3. Roles and Responsibilities

Role	Responsibility
Youth Care Worker / Community Support Worker	Implements the Daily Program Schedule on shift; supports the person's choice within it; documents significant deviations; raises schedule concerns to the Shift Lead or PC.
Shift Lead	Confirms the day's schedule at shift handover (Appendix D); flags any conflict between the schedule and the day's actual events.
Program Coordinator (PC)	Leads development of each person's Daily Program Schedule with the person and their team; keeps the schedule current; leads the review cycle (Part 6).
Program Manager (PM)	Confirms every person in the program has a current, individualized schedule; reviews community participation and activity data across the program; escalates any systemic gap (e.g., lack of day-program access) to the ED.

Role	Responsibility
Executive Director (ED)	Holds overall accountability for policy compliance and for resourcing community participation (transportation, activity budget, staffing ratios).

4. Key Definitions

Term	Definition
Daily Program Schedule	The individualized, written plan of a person's typical day in an ECC home, covering routine, education/day program, activity, community participation, and free-choice time, built from and consistent with their Individual Service Plan.
Individual Service Plan (ISP)	The overarching, longer-term plan for a person's care and goals, developed under ECC-PC-MAN-2026-001. The Daily Program Schedule operationalizes the ISP into a day-to-day structure.
Structured activity	Planned, purposeful activity with a defined goal — skill-building, therapeutic, recreational, or educational — as distinct from unstructured free time.
Community participation	Activity that takes place outside the home and connects the person to their community — school, work, recreation, faith or cultural community, extended family, friends.
Free-choice time	Unstructured time in which the person chooses their own activity without staff direction, built into every day's schedule as a right, not a residual.

PART 2 — Building the Daily Program Schedule

5. Individualized Planning Process

Each person's Daily Program Schedule is built from their Individual Service Plan and developed with the person, to the fullest extent of their ability and wish to participate, and — for children and youth — with input from their guardian, social worker, and care team. The schedule reflects the person's own goals and interests, not a template applied across the home.

6. Required Elements of a Daily Schedule

At minimum, every Daily Program Schedule addresses:

- Wake, self-care, and bedtime routine, appropriate to age and individual need;
- Meals and snacks, cross-referenced to the Nutrition, Illness & Infection Prevention Manual (ECC-NIP-2026-001) and any individual dietary plan;
- School attendance (M) or vocational/day program attendance (C), where applicable;
- At least one structured activity or skill-building opportunity most days;
- Community participation opportunities on a regular, individualized basis — not solely on weekends;
- Daily free-choice time that is genuinely unstructured;
- Any medication, appointment, or health-related routine, cross-referenced to ECC-MED-2026-001 and ECC-HC-2026-001;
- Family, guardian, or significant-relationship contact time, where applicable.

7. Balancing Structure, Choice and Flexibility

A schedule provides predictability without becoming rigid. Staff are expected to use judgment: a schedule that a person consistently resists is a signal to review and adjust it (Part 6), not a rule to be enforced regardless of the person's expressed wishes. See Part 5 for how deviation is handled and documented.

8. Stream-Specific Considerations

(M) Children and Youth in MCFD Care

School attendance is a required element of the schedule for all school-aged children and youth, consistent with the School Act, and any absence is documented and reported per the school's and MCFD's requirements. The schedule accounts for family time, sibling contact, and cultural or Indigenous community connection consistent with the child or youth's care plan and, where applicable, DRIPA-aligned practice.

(C) Adults in CLBC Services

The schedule reflects the adult's own goals under their CLBC individualized plan, including any day program, employment, or volunteer commitment, and is built around the presumption of capability and choice — the adult directs their own schedule to the greatest extent possible, with staff support rather than staff direction.

PART 3 — Core Components of the Schedule

9. Routine and Self-Care

Consistent wake, meal, and bedtime routines support regulation and wellbeing, particularly for children and youth who have experienced instability. Routines are individualized to age, developmental stage, and any sensory or medical need, and are never used as a means of control.

10. Education and Day Programs

School attendance (M) or vocational/day program attendance (C) is a core, protected element of the schedule. Staff coordinate transportation, homework or program support time, and communication with the school or day program as part of the daily routine, and document any pattern of absence or disengagement for PC follow-up.

11. Meaningful Activity and Skill-Building

Each schedule includes structured activity connected to the person's goals — life skills, recreation, creative or cultural activity, therapeutic activity — reflecting genuine interests rather than a generic activity list. Activity choices are revisited at each schedule review (Part 6) as interests change.

12. Community Participation and Inclusion

Community participation is a required, ongoing element of every schedule, not an occasional outing. This is cross-referenced to the Community Inclusion and Access Policy (module of ECC-RC-POL-2026-003) for planning, transportation, and safety considerations, and reflects the person's own community connections — faith, cultural, recreational, or family — rather than staff-selected activities alone.

13. Rest, Recreation and Free Choice Time

Every schedule protects daily unstructured time in which the person chooses their own activity. This time is never removed as a consequence for behaviour and is never left off a schedule for programming convenience.

PART 4 — Development, Posting and Communication

14. Developing the Schedule with the Person and Team

The PC leads development of each new or updated Daily Program Schedule (Appendix A) with the person, and, for children and youth, in consultation with the guardian, social worker, and care team, drawing on the current Individual Service Plan. Adults in CLBC services direct their own schedule development to the greatest extent of their ability, with staff providing support rather than direction, consistent with the presumption of capability.

15. Posting and Accessibility of the Schedule

Each person's current schedule is accessible to the staff supporting them each shift, in a format the person themselves can also access and understand where appropriate (visual schedule, plain-language format, or other adapted format as needed). Personal schedule information is kept confidential and is not visible to other residents or visitors.

16. Communicating Changes to Staff and the Person

Any change to a person's schedule is communicated at shift handover (Appendix D) and updated in the written schedule within 48 hours. Significant or recurring changes are documented on the Schedule Review and Update Record (Appendix C) and, where they reflect a change in goals or needs, are cross-referenced back to the Individual Service Plan.

PART 5 — Flexibility, Choice and Deviation

17. The Schedule Is Not a Restriction

The Daily Program Schedule is a planning tool, not a rule the person must follow. A person may decline a scheduled activity or request a change to their day; staff support this choice rather than enforcing the written schedule. Repeated decline of a specific activity is a signal for the PC to review and revise the schedule (Part 6), not a compliance issue to be managed.

18. Documenting Deviation and Preference

Staff note significant deviations from the schedule in shift documentation — what changed and, where known, why — so that patterns are visible at the next schedule review. This is a planning record, not a behaviour incident report, unless the deviation involves a safety concern that meets the threshold for separate reporting under another ECC policy (e.g., Illness, Injury & Medical Emergency Manual, or Restraint and Seclusion Policy for MCFD programs).

PART 6 — Review and Monitoring

19. Scheduled Review Cycle

Every Daily Program Schedule is formally reviewed by the PC with the person (and team, for children and youth) at minimum every 90 days, and immediately upon any change to the Individual Service Plan, a change in school/day program, a placement change, or a sustained pattern of the person declining scheduled activities. Reviews are recorded on the Schedule Review and Update Record (Appendix C).

20. Monitoring Implementation on Shift

Shift Leads confirm the day's schedule is being followed or appropriately adapted at handover (Appendix D), and note any concern for PC follow-up. This is a light-touch check, not a compliance audit — its purpose is to keep the schedule a living, accurate reflection of the person's actual day.

21. Quality Assurance Indicators

- Percentage of people in the program with a current, individualized Daily Program Schedule on file;
- Percentage of scheduled reviews completed within the 90-day cycle;
- School / day-program attendance rates and any unaddressed pattern of absence;
- Documented community participation frequency per person, per month;
- Any recurring deviation pattern flagged for schedule revision.

These indicators feed the SHSS Quality Assurance Manual and CLBC quarterly reporting, and are reviewed by the PM monthly and the ED quarterly.

PART 7 — Training and Staff Responsibilities

22. Staff Training and Orientation to Individual Schedules

Every staff member reviews the current Daily Program Schedule of each person they support as part of orientation to that program, and before working an unsupervised shift with that person. Staff are trained on the distinction between supporting a schedule and enforcing it, and on how to document deviation and preference under Part 5.
